20	Rewrite the paragraph using stylistic features of academic writing. Some people like reading books a lot while some others don't really care about it at all. Reading can be for fun, for passing time, or sometimes just to look smart in front of others. A person who reads too much and does nothing else can become lazy in real life matters. At the same time, someone who never reads may miss out on many ideas and thoughts. Books can help a person think better and understand things in a deeper way. But it is also true that reading alone is not enough to make someone wise. A person has to use what they read in real situations. Some people read just to argue with others and show off their knowledge. That kind of reading is not really useful in a good way. There are also people who just believe everything written in books without thinking. That can also be a problem because not everything written is always right. So it is better to read, think, and then decide what to believe. In this way reading becomes something helpful and not just a habit.
